

Epistemic Exclusion and Patient Safety Participation Evaluation Study (EPSPE)

We would like to conduct interviews with harmed patients and families

Principal Investigator Dr Josephine Ocloo, harmed patient, activist, and scholar.

Keeping patients safe is essential to our NHS, but there are also many examples of patients being harmed. We are conducting research to understand these experiences in more detail.

Would you like to be involved? If you meet our study criteria, we can pay £50 for an interview for up to 60 minutes.

We want to conduct interviews with diverse groups in the population who believe they have been harmed or experienced unsafe care in the healthcare process.

You may be eligible to participate in this study if you:

- Are a harmed patient or a close family member of a harmed patient.
- Have any health condition.
- Live in England.
- Are aged 18 or older.
- Can provide informed consent.

To address diverse groups, we will consider representation across the Protected Characteristics under the Equality Act 2010 (age, disability, gender reassignment, marriage and civil partnership, pregnancy and maternity, race, religion or belief, sex, and sexual orientation), and geographical location.

If you would like to take part, please email us at: epspe@kcl.ac.uk

Ethics approval has been obtained to conduct this study.
