KING'S College
LONDON

Our intercalated Philosophy BSc course will explore philosophy in its broadest sense – as opposed to philosophy for doctors – by investigating the problems that form the core of the subject as it has evolved in the Western tradition. We do, however, target issues and challenges, and present them in a way that is interesting and relevant to students of medical disciplines.

Key benefits

- Research training that leads to an individual project.
- One-year course leading to an intercalated BSc.
- Teaching by experts in the field.

Course details

We will provide you with an understanding of some central issues in general metaphysics and epistemology, in particular issues concerning the ways in which the kind of objectivity possible in evaluative and ethical thought both resembles and differs from the kind of objectivity that is typical of the natural sciences. This will help you to develop different perspectives on problems you may encounter in your professional life.

Teaching

We teach our courses through a mixture of lectures and seminar discussions, although given the relatively small numbers of students on the course, it is possible to incorporate a good deal of discussion within a lecture.

Module	Lectures/seminars
Knowledge, Objectivity & Relativism	30%
Facts & Values in Historical Perspective	30%
Values, Needs & Desires	30%
Dissertation	10%

Typically, one credit equates to 10 hours of work.

Assessment

We will assess your progress and attainment on all the modules you study through a combination of coursework, in-class presentations, in-class tests and written examinations.

Module	Assessment
Knowledge, Objectivity & Relativism	Summative assessment: one three-hour written examination in the May/June examination period.
Facts & Values in Historical Perspective	As above
Values, Needs & Desires	As above
Dissertation	Summative assessment: dissertation of 10,000 words (maximum)

Regulating body
